

Frequently Asked Questions

What is a 'Cancer key worker'?

A 'Key worker' is offered as your key point of contact and usually will be a Colorectal Nurse Specialist. She helps you to understand more about bowel cancer and its treatment and is also available to talk through your concerns such as any physical, social, practical, emotional or spiritual needs. You will be allocated a Cancer key worker at the point of diagnosis or during your treatment.

What is a Holistic needs assessment? (HNA)

The assessment focuses on you as a whole and not just your illness. It includes suggestions and support to help manage emotional, physical and practical worries.

The things you can discuss at the assessment are:

- Symptoms and physical concerns. You may feel anxious about your illness or about the changes in your body.
- Feeling and emotions. It can be helpful to discuss your reactions, especially if you are feeling very worried or low.
- Any relationship issues. It may be that the relationships you have with friends, your family or your partner have changed. Sexual relationships can be affected.
- Money worries, you may want to know more about financial help available to you.

The assessment may be carried out at various stages throughout your treatment. It is not compulsory but you may benefit from it.

It can take place over the phone or in person when you attend other appointments.

The nurse completing the assessment will be your key worker and known to you, they will be happy to talk about whatever issues are important to you.

The nurse can give you contact details of organisations or services that could help with your concerns, such as Macmillan benefits team or a dietitian.

You will be given a copy of the assessment. It may be shared with other members of the health care team if it will help with your care.
